The Honorable Richard Burr United States Senate 217 Russell Senate Office Building Washington, DC 20510

Dear Senator Burr:

In October, Sgt. Chad Arnold, an officer with the Special Investigations Unit of the North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission (NCWRC), and the commission itself were reportedly honored at the annual Governor's Conservation Achievement Awards banquet. As you may have heard, however, it appears the awards might have been premature.

In recent days, more than three hundred fifty citizens of western North Carolina and several legislators convened near Bryson City to recount abuses by both the United States Forest Service (USFS) and the NCWRC during a four-year, $2 million undercover operation they called "Something Bruin."

Although Something Bruin ostensibly targeted bear poaching rings, these citizens describe a series of travesties perpetrated by Agent Arnold, Georgia Agent Davey Webb and others which included entrapment, killing of bears by the agents themselves and, worst of all, storm trooper tactics which traumatized wives and children.

In particular, Ms. Linda Crisp and her daughter Michelle describe having their homes invaded and family heirlooms seized by agents wearing body armor and carrying fully automatic weapons. Worse, parents were detained outside their home while small children inside were left screaming and unattended.

Although eighty-one hunters were arrested for allegedly bear poaching, few if any have been convicted. State charges against most were reportedly dismissed, with only some later rearrested on federal changes by USFS.

Said The Smoky Mountain News: "...wildlife agents went on a fishing expedition, using entrapment and other underhanded tactics to trick hunters into violating wildlife rules, according to dozens of hunters who have come forward to protest the undercover operation."

The article goes on to report specific examples of malfeasance by wildlife agents, including entrapping hunters into crimes such as bear baiting, nighttime hunting and selling organs -- crimes they otherwise had no intention of committing. Meanwhile, many of the crimes cited were reportedly perpetrated by the agents themselves, including the killing of six out of ten bears.

In a courageous move to protect his constituents, Congressman Mark Meadows recently sent the enclosed letter to Deputy Inspector General Mary Kendall of the U.S. Department of the Interior and Inspector General Phyllis Fong of the U.S. Department of Agriculture calling for an investigation into Operation Something Bruin.

As I am sure you agree, such investigation should not be limited to the policies and procedures employed in Something Bruin. If it can be proven that federal law enforcement officers committed wildlife violations or illegally entrapped hunters, the citizens victimized by their actions deserve to see appropriate criminal charges filed.

I am certain you do not wish to see the lawful citizens of North Carolina subjected to abuses by any law enforcement operation run amok. Therefore, I look forward to seeing you join Congressman Meadows in calling for investigation of Something Bruin by the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture.

If I can answer questions or be of help in any way, please contact me at President@GRNC.org or (704) 907-9206.

Respectfully,

F. Paul Valone President, Grass Roots North Carolina Executive Director, Rights Watch International
